TREMENDOUS EXCITEMENT IN THE CITY.

EXCEEDINGLY IMPORTANT TESTIMONY.

[Mr. Clinton here came into the room, and approaching the Coroner, said that as he pledged his word on the previous evening that Mr. Snodgrass would attend in the morning again, he wished to say that he was present, and would have been before, but he (Mr. Clinton) was detained at his office; he merely mentioned this to show that good faith had been kept in the matter.]

WHERE THE DOCTOR WAS ON THE 26TH OF OCTOBER.

Mr. Schaus, a juror, who had been examining Dr. Burdell's ledger, pointed out to the Coroner an entry, seemingly in the Doctor's handwriting, under date of Oct. 26, 1856, charging one Alexander Fraser with $3, as going to prove that the Doctor was here attending to his business at that time, as usual, and not absent in Saratoga or elsewhere, as rumored.

Examination of Dr. Roberts resumed.—As the Doctor lay, when we went into the room, the wound in the neck was on the left side, and the wounds in the body on that side also; he lay with his face on the floor, the right side of his face to the floor, and that twisted the neck in such a position as to hide the wound in the neck.

Q.—The face was not flat on the floor—how was it partially turned, was it towards you, as you want in? A.—The side of his face was turned partially towards the door of the closet.

Q.—As you entered the door his face was turned from you? A.—Partially so towards the cupboard door or closet door; the feet were perfectly straight, and left hand clenched a very little; it did not appear that he had struggled much; he had on his boots and clothes.

Q.—Did you feel and examine him? A.—We turned him over.

Q.—Was he entirely cold? A.—He was entirely cold and stiff, and had been dead for some time, to all appearance.

Q.—There is no rule by which you can tell from that how long he was dead? A.—No; but from the appearance of the blood on the wall it would seem to have been a good many hours; knowing his habits, about the time he comes in, being nine to ten o'clock, and from all the appearances in the room at the time, I think the deed must have been done very soon after he came into the room; if he had been in the room long I suppose he would have had his bootees off.

Q.—Then, from the appearance of things, and your knowledge of his habits, you think he must have been murdered very soon after he entered the house? A.—Yes, sir; if, as some of his friends stated, he was to be in early that evening; Miss Hubbard swore that on Saturday evening he was to have been with her, and he stated to her that he was going to retire early on Friday evening.

Coroner.—As the Doctor knows, a body sometimes does not become perfectly cold for eight or ten hours?

Q.—I suppose this depends somewhat on the manner in which he died; where much blood is taken from the body it cools much sooner.

Q.—That is what I am coming to: so much blood having gone out of the body, do you not think it would become cold in a very short time? A.—I think it would take some hours under those circumstances.

Q.—You saw the room, and the circumstances—do you think that much blood escaped from the body? A.—I do not think there was as much blood as I would expect such wounds to produce; the principal blood that did come was from the carotid artery, for the biggest clot was at the neck; from this circumstance we thought at first (not seeing any wound) that he died from apoplexy; when we turned him over, the wound in the neck came under, and then I said to some of the gentlemen standing there that it looked as if he had been bleeding at the nose, and started to run to the door, fell there and bled to death; that was the report made to the Police office; soon afterwards Dr. Francis came; on examining, he saw the wound in the neck, in the carotid artery; we then thought he did it himself, and looked for some instrument; but finding none, we concluded that he must have been murdered; previous to that, I saw a little blood on the knob of the door; I did not know but some one had, in going in and out, put it there; the moment I found he was murdered, I went looking round; I found blood along down the stairs; I discovered blood on the head of the stairs, and immediately in front of the door; some one said that the officer who turned him over might have done this; I examined it thoroughly; the blood on the hall and front door was dried; the same as that in the room; I examined the blood in the garret, and it appeared to be different from that in the Doctor's room; if any one in the morning had got blood on their fingers and put them on the wall, it would be dry, but would appear fresh.

Q.—The blood on the door below, what was it like? A.—It looked as if some one had put his fingers on and around the knob, to pull the door open; it was on the outside of the door, and when it was shut to, it bloodied the casing of the door, where the door went against it.

Q.—I would ask whether blood like that might not have got on the door from persons who had been to the Doctor for dental operations, whose teeth might be bleeding as they went down? A.—In this case they very seldom have blood on their fingers, and this blood did not resemble the blood that would come from teeth, mixed with saliva; it looked different; I would state that this blood might have been put on by a policeman; it would depend on the action of the individual, and the circumstances under which he opened the door.

Q.—Now, I will go back to the time when you were in the room with Dr. Maine and his assistants; did you go up to see the ladies? A.—I did.

Q.—Immediately on discovering that this was a murder or before? A.—I went immediately after going into the room first, and seeing that he was dead, before I even thought that he had died from apoplexy; Dr. Maine wished me to go up stairs; the three ladies were in Mrs. Cunningham's room; Mrs. C. and her two daughters, and Mr. Snodgrass; the little boys might have been there, but I do not recollect.

Q.—Had they, prior to that, been told of the death? A.—Oh! certainly.

Q.—Did you see Mr. Eckel that morning? A.—I did not until he returned.

Q.—Previous to your coming here? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Had you seen him the night before? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—How late before that had you seen him? A.—I do not know, perhaps three or four days, perhaps a week.

Q.—Were you well acquainted with Mr. Eckel? A.—I was not. I used to see him sitting in this parlor.

Q.—Who made the first remark when you entered the room? A.—Well, Judge, it is just such a scene as I could not describe.

Q.—You do not know who spoke first? A.—No; Mr. Snodgrass sat by her chair, holding Mrs. Cunningham; she was in a state of great excitement; we were the young ladies; I tried to quiet them; I stayed there but a few moments, and came down; when we thought that he died in a fit of apoplexy, I immediately told the ladies it was not as bad as they imagined—that he might have died a natural death; then Mrs. Cunningham appeared more easy; she said if he died a natural death she would feel more easy; after I found out that he was murdered, I went up; I cannot say what was said; in fact, there was not very much said, for it was a very solemn time; I felt very bad to see an old friend cut up so; Mrs. Cunningham told me that the officers were up to see what she had to say, and, said she, "I cannot give my name as Cunningham, for I am married to Dr. Burdell;" I was very much surprised, and asked her when, and if she had a certificate? she said she had; I asked her to let me see it, as I knew it would tell me more than if she was speaking for an hour; she hunted it up, among her things, and handed it to me, and I read it; that was the first I knew of the fact.

Q.—You say the wounds in the body, after it was undressed? A.—Yes, Sir, I saw everything that was done, until the search was made.

Q.—Did you see any test made of an instrument in the wounds, for the purpose of leading to a discovery of the instrument with which it was done? A.—There was no test made that day; I did not see any subsequently.

Q.—Do you know anything of the relations existing between Mrs. Cunningham and the Doctor—of the Doctor's feelings towards her, whether friendly or unfriendly? A.—Well, Judge, this places me in a peculiar position; they were both friends of mine—that is, acquaintances, that I have often called in and out to see; I often went into the Doctor's room, and he into mine; I have seen them together often, and always saw them speak together pleasantly before me; whatever occurred behind my back I do not know.

Q.—Did he never talk to you about any difficulty? A.—At the trial he accused her of stealing the $500 note; I had some conversation with the Doctor, and at the time of the breach of promise, he said the breach of promise was brought because he accused her of stealing the note; that was all the difficulty he said he had.

Q.—He stated to you that she brought the breach of promise in consequence of his accusing her of stealing the note? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Then there has been no evidence from you? A.—The first day there was, and it was only that I knew nothing about the murder, nor anything that could throw light upon it.

Q.—It is important that your testimony should be taken before the Jury; when you arrived the two Dutchmen were here? A.—Yes; the young man who works for Dr. Maine stood at the door of the Doctor's office, where he had been committed, and took charge of the door; Dr. Maine was in the hall; when I came, the young man unlocked the door, and I just stepped in and looked at the lady; supposing that the Doctor had committed suicide, that was the word Mr. Snodgrass brought to my ears; and the servant girl came for me very soon after Mr. Snodgrass; Snodgrass appeared very much frightened; after I went in and looked at the Doctor, I came out, and Dr. Maine told me to go up and see the ladies; said he, "They are almost crazy; you are acquainted with them, and go up and see how they are;" I went up, stayed there a short time, and came down; a policeman had come here in that time; then we went into the room, and the policeman said he wished to report the cause of death at the office; we could not see anything, the Doctor being on his face, and it was proposed to turn him over on his back.

Q—Have you anything in evidence to tell? A—No.

Judge Osgood—Do you know of any other cause of the death of Mr. Burdell? A—I know of no other cause.

Judge Osgood—Do you know of any other cause than the one you have stated, why Mr. Burdell should be murdered

A SINGULAR KIND SUIT.

Andrews vs. West.—The plaintiff was chorister of the Broadway Tabernacle. Some of the choir did not like him, and therefore got up a printed circular addressed to the congregation, stating that he did not possess the requisite qualifications for a chorister of that church. This was signed by seventeen members of the choir, and by the defendant as one of them. Mr. Andrews left the church, and now sues Mr. West for libel, setting his damage at $10,000. The case is still on.

Spring vs. Smith.—Motion to set aside judgment denied without costs, and without prejudice to a second motion.

Patten vs. The Accessory Transit Company.—Order settled.

THE RIGHT OF RAILROAD COMPANIES TO THROW SNOW UPON THE SIDES OF THE STREET.

The Eighth-avenue Railroad Company vs. Geo. W. Blunt.—After the great snow storm, about a year ago, the plaintiffs cleared their tracks, and shoveled a quantity of snow on to the side of the street, next to the defendant's store, No. 512 Hudson-street. The defendant shoveled it back again, and the Company sued him, demanding $1,000 damages. The defendant in his answer stated that the Company shoveled the snow on to his sidewalk and gutters; that he was warned to have the snow properly leveled, which he did, merely throwing back upon the Company's track the snow which they had wrongfully caused to be cast upon his premises. He claims that the defendants blocked up his premises so that carts could not get up, and he thereby lost much business, &c., for which he demands damages. The case is still on. It is of some importance, as it involves the right of our City railroad companies to throw the snow on the premises of private individuals, or to block up the street.

Manuel Willard and Anderson for plaintiffs; C. D Evans and Mr. Dyott for defendant.

Estate of Mr. Guynet, one of the Lost Passengers on the Steamer Arctic—A sad, old Tale vividly Retold.

SURROGATE'S COURT.—Feb. 10.

An examination was entered upon to-day involving a novel and intricate question of survivorship of Mr. Guynet, his wife and two children, passengers lost on the ill-fated Arctic, on the 27th of September, 1854. The case comes up through an opposition of the creditors of Mr. Guynet to have the real estate left by him sold in order to liquidate the claims they allege as holding against him. It appears that the estate against which these claims are brought, was the property of Mrs. Guynet, and standing in her own name anterior and subsequent to the marriage. The question turns, therefore, upon the priority of death of Mr. and Mrs. Guynet and the two children. The creditors claim, that as a matter of law, the presumption is that she died first, when the property descended to the children, and that the children died next, whereby the father became the heir to the property. If the fact of the father's death cannot be proven to have occurred last, the estate will go to the next of kin to the wife. The wife's relatives contest the application. The amount of property involved is real estate valued at $25,000, situated in Flushing and Portchester.

James C. Lace, Captain of the Arctic at the time she was lost, was the only witness examined to-day. His testimony was as follows: I was Captain of the steamer Arctic, of the Collins line; she was lost on the Grand Banks, Newfoundland, on the 27th of September, 1854; I knew George Guynet, now deceased; he was a passenger on board the Arctic the voyage she was lost; his wife and two children, I remember, were with him; the eldest child was a boy about twelve years old, and the other, a girl, two or three years younger; possibly there may have been a third child on board; Mr. Guynet was about forty years old, and Mrs. Guynet some ten years younger; I did not see much of Mrs. Guynet, as she was confined most of the time to her state room from seasickness; Mr. Guynet was on deck every day; I saw him at the time of the loss of the vessel; the steamer sunk almost instantaneously; I last saw Mr. Guynet standing on the upper quarter-deck with his wife and children; I saw them half a minute before the vessel went down; I spoke to them, shook hands with them and bid them fare well; we all expected to go down together; both Mr. and Mrs. Guynet and children had on life preservers; there was a pretty heavy sea on at the time; it had been blowing hard previously; all the persons remaining on the vessel were assembled about the same spot, some two hundred in number; of those who went down in the ship, there were but two passengers saved, myself, Mr. George Allen and ten of the crew; neither Mr. Guynet, his wife nor children were saved; those who escaped were saved by having got hold of fragments of the wreck; I do not know whether Mr. Guynet could swim; he was an able-bodied man; there were about fifty women among the passengers who went down with the steamer.

Cross-examination.—My impression is that Mr. Guynet was sea-sick at the commencement of the voyage; he was had hold of his child when the steamer sunk; the other child, I remember, was standing by its mother; Mrs. Guynet did have hold of her husband's arm; I attempted to continue about my duties, I heard no remarks from him or her, in regard to their going down together, or dying together; they both seemed to be self-possessed; the little boy evinced great distress at the idea of being drowned, and was weeping; his father was evidently trying to comfort him, although I heard no remark he made; there was some talking among the passengers, that they would stick to the ship; Mr. George Allen, a young German, and myself, were the only parties saved of those going down with the ship; Mr. Allen had a family with him on board; my men gathered around on the quarter-deck before the vessel went down; I had a son on board who was lost; my impression is that Mr. and Mrs. Guynet had their children with them on board; but I am not certain; the little boy had hold of his father's hand when the water rushed up into the cabin, and exclaimed "Are we all lost;" this was just before the vessel sunk; when I last saw Mrs. Allen she was on deck of the spar—the mainyard I think; after the steamer went down I saw Mr. Allen also on a spar alongside of his wife; Mrs. Allen got upon her spar by her own exertions; from my position on the paddle-box I could see those who were about to land got on any of the furniture or fragments of the steamer. After the vessel sunk I did not see either Mr. Guynet, his wife and children, or any of the passengers in the present case; there were probably sixty or seventy men on the steamer who had their families with them; there were about sixty ladies altogether, as nearly; I presume some of those saved in the boats had their families with them, as I do not know of any who went in the boats and left their wives and children behind them.

Direct examination resumed.—My son was in my area at the steamer went down; he was eleven years old and was not saved; the young German who was

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—Special Term.

Before Judge Daly.

Decisions filed.

Gadsden vs. Silver Spring.—This is an action for breach of the law of marriage, in which the plaintiff claims $20,000 damages. The present position is to discharge the defendant from an order of arrest granted on the 5th of February by which he was held to bail in $1,000.

The affidavits on the part of the plaintiff show that she had been living with William Fairchildren, a gentleman, in Greenwich-street, for upwards of two years; that about three months ago the defendant went to live at the hotel as a boarder, and immediately began to take great notice of the plaintiff; finally proposed to marry her, and take her to California, which proposition she accepted; that in the month of January last the defendant being unwell, the plaintiff took his medicine to him into his bedroom, at which time the defendant again promised to marry her, and she relying on his promises, and yielding to constantly urged, gratified his wishes, and she is now enceinte by him. She further states that defendant had since the said carnal intercourse, repeatedly declared her to gratify his desires; but that she had discharged herself; that he had promised her that after that time, and on the 5th of February, she ascertained that he was going away clandestinely to California in the steamship Illinois, with intent to violate his engagements with her. The hotel keeper also swore that the defendant had in his presence, told the plaintiff to procure her wedding dress, and that he would marry her and take her to California on the 20th of Feb. inst., but that on the 4th of February the defendant got his intimate friends around him and drank his farewell glass, telling them that on the next day he would "float on the wild ocean," and they (his friends) said to plaintiff, "why so foolish as to believe him."

The defendant admits as to the seduction, but swears most vehemently that he never intended to abandon the plaintiff, but to the contrary, that he had purchased passage tickets for two persons to go on the steamer of the 20th inst., but that owing to his arrest, he was unable to leave the City; and he offered through his counsel in open Court, to marry the plaintiff on any day, or at any place, that he was willing at that instant to let Judge Daly tie the knot, so that they might both be happy, and the lady's reputation saved. But to these offers the counsel for the plaintiff turned a deaf ear, stating that he had advised his client not to marry the defendant, because he might go away and leave his client destitute, and that he thought it less disgrace to have an illegitimate child than marry under such circumstances.

Judge Daly took the papers, but remarked that he thought it would be more conducive to the welfare of the plaintiff to marry the defendant, and advised both parties to think seriously of the matter till to-day,—that he would then render his decision.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—Feb. 10.

Before Recorder Smith.

Peter Rowe, one of the Eighth Ward "Short Boys," was convicted of highway robbery. Mr. Wilmarth, who keeps a fish market, was returning from the theatre to his house in Varick-street on the 14th of January last. He was knocked down in Wooster-street by four boys, of whom Rowe was one, and while he lay on the ground Rowe snatched his breastpin, worth $20, and passed it to his accomplices, who ran off. Wilmarth succeeded in holding Rowe till an officer arrived, and the prisoner was taken to the station-house. The evidence was so plain against him that the Jury rendered their verdict without leaving their seats. He will be sentenced on Saturday, and the City will be relieved of one of the "pestiferous."

Eulice Dupree alias Madame Leon, a lady of years of age, belonging to a family of wealth and respectability, was brought to the bar. It will be remembered that this lady has made herself notorious by her shoplifting. She was arrested for stealing on the 27th of February, 1856, one piece of silk from the store of A. T. Stewart & Co. of the value of $45 50. In her examination before Justice Osborne on the charge she stated that she was a native of Paris, 35 years of age, unmarried, was engaged in trade, but refused to give any information as to her family. She denied having stolen the property, but said she was merely examining it in the store when the officer arrested her. She was bailed in the sum of $500 by Mr. Lyon Barthard. Some time after she was arrested for a like offence, and underwent an incarceration in the Tombs for the space of two months, but was subsequently admitted to bail. Madame Leon put in a plea of petit larceny on the first indictment, which on account of her ill-health the District-Attorney consented to accept. Her appearance in Court created a great sensation. She was very pale, and attired in deep mourning as she seemed to feel her position keenly, burying her face in her handkerchief during the continuance of the proceedings.

The District-Attorney read the following note from Dr. Coroner Perry:

NEW-YORK, Feb. 7, 1857.

To the District-Attorney:

SIR: I made a partial examination of Mrs. Leon yesterday, but upon after reflection not being satisfied, I made another more complete investigation to-day. I find that she has suffered from loss of blood, being now in an exhausted condition. I find that she has not been recently delivered, by an examination of the arms and thighs. A vaginal examination indicates a certain lesion of the uterus, and I have not now the slightest doubt but that the loss of blood has been the result of that disease, which disease would prove her to be in somewhat a suffering condition, so much so that incarceration in the State Prison would endanger her life.

Respectfully, &c. F. W. PERRY.

Her counsel stated that his client was likewise suffering from a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, and he trusted that His Honor would be as lenient as he consistently could be. If more proof as to her physical condition was required, it could be furnished.

His Honor expressed himself satisfied with the truth of Coroner Perry's statement, and remarked that it was always a painful duty to pronounce a sentence of punishment on a person suffering from physical indisposition, but in this case there was no palliatory circumstances. The prisoner was living in affluence and luxury; necessity was not in her case the incentive to crime. Justice demanded that she should go to the Penitentiary, he knew she would have proper medical care. He then sentenced her to the Penitentiary for six months.

John McCann, indicted for grand larceny with four others, in stealing a hogshead of sugar from Pier No. 11 East River, the property of Mr. Powers, was found guilty of petit larceny only, and sentenced to six months in the Penitentiary. The evidence against the others not sustaining the charge, they were dismissed.

Samuel Goldman, a German peddler, found guilty of petit larceny, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months. Hugh Boyle, guilty of grand larceny, received a like sentence.

In the case of Isadore Frey, the little boy found guilty of assaulting Marks Oberndorfer, another boy, with intent to do bodily harm, the Recorder suspended judgment.

The Court adjourned to 11 o'clock this morning.

MARINE COURT.

Werner vs. Kemena.—Motion to quash an attachment, on the ground of the affidavit, on which it was granted, did not state the facts and circumstances, &c.

By the Court—MATHEWS, Justice, &c.—This is a short attachment, and is issued on the ground "that the said Kemena is about to remove his property from the City and County of New-York, and that the said Kemena is not a resident of this State, and has property liable to attachment in this County," &c.

This process is authorized by the act to abolish imprisonment for debt, passed in 1831, and can only issue against a non-resident of the county.

It may issue in any county in the State except the county where the defendant resides.

It may issue, of course, and without any written application, affidavit, or bond, in all cases where the defendant is a non-resident of the county, and the demand arises upon contract.

The act reads as follows: "Whenever, by the provisions of the thirteenth section of this act, no warrant can issue, and the defendant shall reside out of the county, he shall be proceeded against by summons or attachment, returnable not less than two, nor more than four days, from the date thereof, which shall be served at least two days before the time of appearance therein," &c.

The Court says, in Clark vs. Lane, 15 W. R., p. 479; Savage, C. J.: "That the summons or attachment authorized by the act to abolish imprisonment for debt; may issue without any affidavit whatever."

In the case of Bates vs. Relyea, 5 Hill R., p. 264, Cowen, J., says: "An attachment issued under the non-imprisonment act, against a debtor, not a non-resident of the same county with the creditor, is a valid process, although there be neither an affidavit of fraud, nor a bond to pay damages or return any thing moneys."

And in Wood vs. Randall, same Judge, Cowen, J., says: "No affidavit is necessary to authorize the issuing of an attachment against a non-resident defendant."

And in the case case of Van Ellen vs. Hurd, 4 Hill, p. 312, Bronson, Judge: "An attachment against a non-resident of the county, may issue the act to abolish imprisonment for debt, May 1831, without any affidavit."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The proceedings of the Inquest, yesterday, were only important. The principal witness examined, Mr. FARRELL, testified to having seen a man (supposed Dr. BURDELL) enter No. 31 Bond-street about 11 o'clock on the night of the murder, and having immediately after heard a scream and fall, and to having then seen a man, bareheaded and in his shirt-sleeves, open the front door, look out and go back. This man he fully identified as ECKEL. A Miss HAYDEN also testified that a lady, whom she identified as Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, came with a gentleman to her store on the Friday of the murder to purchase a sword-cane, saying it must be short and stout, and must be had that day. An examination of the books of the Artisans' Bank shows that Dr. BURDELL was in the City on the 15th Oct., the day of the alleged marriage, so that he may have been married after all. Another witness saw Dr. BURDELL in the afternoon of Friday, and was told that he was going to Brooklyn. The publication of the leading parts of this testimony in the EXTRA TIMES, last evening, created an immense sensation. Our office was literally crowded, and 10,000 or 12,000 copies of the Extra were sold as rapidly as they could be struck off from the press.

We have received our files of papers from Mexico City to the 16th of January. The only news of importance is that already telegraphed from New-Orleans, of the suppression of the insurrection in San Luis. According to the latest intelligence received from Guanajuatl and Queretaro, the insurgents were flying in the greatest confusion, leaving behind them on the road their baggage and war material. Whole detachments of them surrendered up to General ECHEGARAYAY, who was in pursuit with eleven hundred horse. A loan to the Government had restocked its finances, and the insurrection was totally crushed, having lasted just one month.

Further particulars of the damage done by the recent high freshets will be found in our columns this morning. The water in the Hudson was rising on Monday night and yesterday, and the present cold weather prevents the probability of a general rise at present. Much suffering has been relieved in Albany by Committees of Citizens appointed for that purpose. Very serious damage has also occurred on the Western rivers by the breaking up of the ice and rising of the water, and railroad travel and mail communication have been very much impeded.

In the United States Senate yesterday, notice was given of intention to introduce a bill providing for the time and method of electing United States Senators by the State Legislatures. Such a measure seems to be rightly necessary, in view of the difficulties which have recently occurred. The credentials of Mr. FITCH, the proceedings on Monday in the Senate, and the protests of the minority of the Indiana Legislature, were, after debate, referred to the Judiciary Committee. In the House the bill establishing Collection Districts, and for other purposes, was tabled by a vote of 96 to 85. The Senate's Submarine Telegraph bill was referred to the Post-Office Committee, after unsuccessful motions to refer it to the Committee of the Whole, and to lay it on the table. The Tariff bill was then debated in Committee.

A variety of interesting information will be found in our special telegraphic dispatch from Washington this morning.

Nothing of special importance was done in the Legislature yesterday. A summary of the proceedings will be found under our telegraphic head.

A dispatch from Albany states that Governor KING has, without doubt, vetoed the Supply Bill of 1856, and that his message announcing the fact will probably be sent in to the Legislature to-day.

A spirited reply on behalf of Trinity Church, to the charges made in the Report of the State Senate Committee, has been sent to us for publication. We shall give the matter some attention as soon as the present extraordinary pressure upon our columns will permit.

Latest advices from the Plains report terrible storms and intensely cold weather, in consequence of which the mail-coaches had to be left on the road, and the mails brought through on muleback. The last eastward train was compelled to return. More trouble with the Indians is reported.

Four Cotton presses were burst at Mobile, on Sunday, involving a loss of 10,000 or 15,000 bales of Cotton.

A telegraphic dispatch from Baltimore states that the ship Samuel Russell, a full account of whose misfortunes we published a day or two since, has been got out of her bad position and towed into Hampton Roads.

Mr. SANFORD, Editor of the Paterson (N. J.) Democrat, visited this City on Saturday, and has not since been heard of.

A warning to persons who allow themselves to be frightened into marrying females, is furnished by the experience of a young man named AYLEE, who carried a revolver to defend himself from governess. One of the barrels exploded in his pocket, lodging a bullet in his leg, where it still remains, and threatens him with serious and lasting injury.

Yesterday the little schooner Jane P. Glover was taken from the foot of Sixteenth-street to the Navy-Yard, on a military ship, temporarily left on board her by the Government, and a sharp look-out set on shore for any parties who may show an anxiety as to her fate! This is the vessel about whose destination we yesterday made note that there was a mystery. She came originally from Hewick, Maine, being bought by a Cuban gentleman last December, as it was thought, for the Slave-trade. Being so closely watched at this port, she took out a coasting license and ran up the Connecticut River, where her crew was to be brought her by a sloop. The Government officers looking out, as noted, the bailing was not consummated, and she came back to New-York. What she was seized—for, will probably be ascertained if any smooth-tongued Yankee will claim her, as slavers are [illegible]

A most destructive fire broke out between 2 and 3 o'clock yesterday morning, in a large five-story brick building on the corner of Mercer and Houston-streets, owned and occupied by Mr. B. BOOCK, as a cabinet manufactory and dwelling. The flames spread with the greatest rapidity, and Mr. and Mrs. BOOCK, who slept on the fourth floor, were burned to death. The rest of the inmates, eight in number, escaped in safety. The fire is believed to have been the work of an incendiary. Some adjoining buildings were also damaged.

Mrs. JANE ADELE DESAISNES was burned to death on Monday, at her residence, No. 170 Duane-street, in consequence of her clothes accidentally taking fire from a grate. She was 54 years of age, and a native of St. Domingo.

A decision has been rendered by Judge MITCHELL in regard to the issuing of attachments from the Marine Court. It has heretofore been customary to require an affidavit as to the non-residence of the defendant, but the Judge rules in this decision, and supports his ruling by copious references, that this is not necessary.

CHARLES B. HUNTINGTON'S name appeared before the world again yesterday, in the sale of some of his real estate. He is believed to have more, but the assignee cannot find it.

An examination was entered upon yesterday before the Surrogate touching the administration of the estate of Mr. GUYNOT, one of the passengers lost with the steamer Arctic. Mr. G.'s creditors have applied for the sale of the estate to pay their claims. It appears, however, that the estate belonged to Mrs. GUYNOT and was held in her own name. The application, therefore, is resisted by the relatives of Mrs. GUYNOT, causing the whole question to turn upon the question which of the three-named parties, Mr. G., Mrs. G. or the two children was drowned first. If Mr. GUYNOT died last, the creditors can receive their dues. If Mrs. GUYNOT died first, the property goes to her relatives. The estate in dispute is worth $25,000. Captain LUCAS, of the Arctic, is the only witness thus far examined.

In the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Madame LEON, alias Felice Dupree, a lady of wealth and position in society, who has made herself notorious for her shoplifting proclivities, was sentenced, by Recorder SCOTT, to six months' imprisonment in the Penitentiary. There were two indictments against her for grand larceny. She entered a plea of petit larceny to the first, which was accepted by the District-Attorney, as it was shown that she was suffering severely from sickness.

The Board of Governors met on Tuesday, and did nothing of consequence beyond transferring their banking account to the Mechanics' Bank, which has offered to give the Department 4 per cent. per annum on the average balance over $10,000. The Aldermanic Committee on Ferries, who have been besieged by no fewer than 11,000 petitioners, also met, but nobody came to substantiate the complaints.

They charge sixty days' imprisonment for shooting at a constable in Brooklyn. Frank KAUFFMAN entertained himself in that way lately, the constable having come to arrest him for assault and battery. Justice FOLKS gave him the sixty days.

There are four separate police bills pressed in different quarters for the relief of Brooklyn. Fewer bills and more policemen and better would do better service.

Mr. JAMES BURNS and associates sent in a communication to the Brooklyn Common Council Monday evening last, asking a grant to lay a double track on Atlantic-street, from the South Ferry to Bedford, and to run horse cars thereon.

The Curtain Lifted—the Mystery of the Murder Dispelled.

The Bond-street drama approaches its close. Yesterday's proceedings at the inquest substantially fastened upon JOHN J. ECKEL and Mrs. CUNNINGHAM the guilt of the bloodiest and most awful murder that has startled this City for many years. The parties, of course, will be put upon their trial,—and it is possible they may not, upon that full and final examination, be convicted. But a prima facie case has been fully made out against them. There seems little reason to doubt that ECKEL did the deed, —and he cannot be connected with it without implicating Mrs. CUNNINGHAM.

A remarkable feature of the case is that the witness by whom this consummation has been reached, has been entirely unknown and unheard of until the last moment. An anonymous letter was sent to the Coroner, yesterday, stating a rumor that a Mr. FARRELL was in Bond-street on the night of the murder, and had evidence to give of some importance,—but that he declined to come forward, "lest he should be kept from his family and inconvenienced by appearing as a witness, as he is a poor man." In view of the Coroner's treatment of witnesses, it must be confessed he had some grounds for this apprehension. In consequence of this communication, Mr. FARRELL was summoned to attend, and testified that he was passing through Bond-street at about 11 o'clock on the night in question,—that he sat down upon the steps of the house No. 31, and was there seated when a man with a shawl came up the steps and entered the house,—that not more than a minute and a half elapsed before he heard the cry of murder, and then the fall of a heavy body,—and that in half a minute after that a man, in his shirt sleeves, with bushy hair, opened the door—looked out—asked him what he was doing there—shut the door and went back. Mr. FARRELL got up, and hearing nothing further, soon after went away.

The witness was then taken by the Coroner into an upper room, in which the Jury, Reporters, Policemen and some ten or fifteen others had been introduced without his knowledge, and asked if he could identify any person there present as the man whom he had seen looking out at the door on the night in question. He looked slowly, carefully and searchingly into the face of every man present —his eye ranging round the whole circle—and seemed about to abandon the effort, when his eye returned to the last man in the circle, rested for a minute steadily upon his unmoved countenance, and he then declared that he was the man. This man was ECKEL. And Mr. FARRELL afterwards stated that he had no doubt whatever of his identity,—though he had never seen him on any other occasion than when he opened the door on that fatal Friday night. Thus the very precaution which ECKEL took against being observed,—his going to the front door and looking out to see if anybody was in the street, proved the means, and thus far the only means, of his exposure!

The fact thus developed of his going to the front door explains the indications which led us originally to the belief that the murderer left the house after the deed was done,—the appearance of blood upon the stairway wall and the document of the outer door. It seems now almost certain that ECKEL was secreted in the Doctor's room when he entered, and that [illegible]

[illegible] the foul deed was done, he had only [illegible] that he had come in and secreted himself as his [illegible]. The rapidity with which the whole was accomplished is shown by the statements of the witness FARRELL,—that not more than a minute and a half elapsed after the Doctor's entrance before he heard the cry and then the fall,—and that within half a minute after that, ECKEL came to the door. Mrs. CUNNINGHAM is also identified as having, in company with a gentleman, on Friday purchased a sword cane in Broadway,—describing the kind desired and saying they must have it on that day. This leaves it impossible to doubt her complicity in the murder,—or that the whole affair was deliberately and systematically planned. How far other parties in the house were implicated, it is impossible to conjecture. Nothing has yet been shown to connect them with this most shocking affair. But it will be very difficult to convince the public that no noise was heard by any of the inmates on that night. If Mrs. CUNNINGHAM personally had any part in the murder, her daughters must have sworn falsely when they testified that she did not leave her bed after retiring that night. Of this, however, there is as yet nothing like positive proof.

It seems to be established by several witnesses that there was a noise,—that it was very peculiar and loud enough to attract attention in the street. ECKEL was probably in the front room when BURDELL entered the back room, and on going in to deal the blow he would be very likely to leave the door between the rooms open. As one of the front windows was also open, a noise might very easily be heard in the street, without being very audible in other parts of the house.

ECKEL had probably taken off his coat and boots, and fully prepared himself for the bloody deed. He must also have left the house that night to dispose of the weapon he had used, his bloody clothes and other mute witnesses of the murder—for these could not all have been burned or put out of the way within the house. What disposition he has made of them will probably come to light hereafter.

In spite of the horror that the fastening of such a crime upon a woman must inspire, the public mind will experience a feeling of relief at the discovery of the guilty parties. The prospect that the deed would remain shrouded in darkness, and its perpetrators enjoy complete immunity, induced a feeling of alarm and discontent. The disclosure of the mystery will bring a corresponding sentiment of satisfaction.

Accomplices in Crime.

Wickedness is so common that the perpetration of individual crimes causes no especial wonder. A bad man may, either from the impulses of his own vile nature, or from the necessities or temptation of his position, be guilty of the greatest crimes. But that which excites our greatest alarm and wonder in the developments of criminal cases, is the apparent ease with which rogues have been able to find congenial spirits, who were willing to join in their rascalities whenever it has been necessary to have the cooperation of a confederate. There is, of course, a kind of freemasonry among rogues by which they know each other, but it has often been necessary in the execution of a scheme of plunder, or murder, to secure the assistance of a man or woman unsuspected of crime, and such persons have usually been found who were willing to aid in the scheme.

A most remarkable instance of this was lately developed in England, in the trial of the men who committed the great bullion robbery on the South Eastern Railroad. The robbery occurred nearly two years ago, and the culprits have but just been detected and brought to justice. Two expert thieves, one of whom, named AGAR, had often been in this country, where, according to his own confession, he had made considerable money by speculation, conceived the idea of robbing the bullion Express car on the road in question. They were men of intelligence and possessed considerable money, AGAR having £3,000 in the Funds, and enjoyed great facilities for carrying on their nefarious business. After debating the matter a while they came to the conclusion that it would be impossible to succeed unless they could receive the cooperation of two of the officers of the road. One of these was a book-keeper, and the other a conductor, of unblemished reputation, who had been in the service of the Company twelve years. Yet the two thieves did not hesitate to impart their secret to these two confidential servants of the road, who immediately fell in with the scheme, and plans were perfected for consummating the robbery. So difficult was it, however, that more than a year elapsed before it was consummated, and the rogues made off with £12,000 sterling in bullion, without a suspicion being excited as to who were the culprits; and they were only discovered by the treachery of the thief who had planned the robbery.

When the two brothers KNAPP in Salem made up their minds to murder their uncle, they had no difficulty in hiring the two brothers CROWNINGSHIELD to commit the deed for a very trifling recompense. In the Burdell case there is abundant reason for believing that the foul deed was committed by more than one person, and that the murder had been carefully planned and coolly executed. Some person, with the fiendish purpose in his heart, had sought a confederate, and the first one to whom the perilous proposition was made must have yielded without remorse to the horrible temptation. There is nothing so startling in connection with these developments of vice as the apparent ease with which the originators of great crimes have found ready instruments and partners in their hellish business; and there is nothing which excites our wonder more than that subtle and almost preternatural instinct by which a rogue is enabled to select out of a crowd the congenial spirit who can be made his accomplice and dupe.

THE PREVENTIVE TO MURDERS.—When a screw is discovered loose in society, or elsewhere, the better way is to remedy the defect at once. It has taken mankind a long time to arrive at even our present imperfect social organization, and it will take a good while longer to render that intricate piece of machinery, called Government, perfect. The murder of Dr. Burdell, and some of the developments that have been made during the Coroner's investigation, have detected one of the loose screws in our laws, and an easy remedy for it is easily suggested. Secret marriages have always been productive of a vast amount of domestic distress and immorality; and the disclosures of the BURDELL murder are sufficient to show that they may be made the means of covering up the most mysterious and horrible crimes. As marriages may now be consummated, it would be easier than for a man or woman to personate another in a secret marriage, with the design of claiming the property of the person represented on his or her death. But such an impossure might be rendered impossible without making any change in the marriage laws of the State. All that is necessary to prevent marriages for criminal purposes, is to pass a law making it necessary that every marriage shall be published within a specified time of its performance. There might be a registration of marriages, or a fine imposed upon a clergyman or magistrate performing the ceremony without advertising the names of the parties; or all marriages should be made illegal which were not advertised within a certain period. The Legislature is now in session, and a law of some kind might easily be passed which would prevent the possibility of such an occurrence as that which has weighed so heavily against Mrs. CUNNINGHAM in the BURDELL tragedy.

The Dallas Treaty.

Advices from Washington represent the prospect of confirming the Treaty negotiated by Mr. DALLAS as by no means so desperate as the vote by which it was sent back to the Senate Committee would indicate. We trust these assurances are well-founded. We should regard the rejection of this treaty as a public calamity. It may not be the best possible adjustment of the differences to which it relates, but it is the best which we can now obtain. It interferes with no American interest, and infringes upon no American rights. The only popular objection to its provisions rests upon the fact that it recognizes certain British rights in Central America. But it must be remembered that those rights are asserted and will be maintained by Great Britain;—that their existence does not at all depend upon their being recognized by us,—and that while this Treaty admits, it also limits and defines, them.

Our Government has to choose between two evils:—either conclude this Treaty, concede the limited rights which it asserts for Great Britain, and thus close all differences with that power,—or else deny all her claims, and prepare to resist them by force of arms. If this Treaty is rejected, it will be a substantial notification to Great Britain that she must abandon all claims and all asserted rights in Central America. No man believes for a moment that she will do any such thing. The naval forces of the two countries upon the Central American station will almost certainly come into collision, and the nation will find itself suddenly involved in all the horrors of war. There cannot be a sane man in the Union who wishes such a result, or who believes the interests involved in this Treaty worth such a contest.

The welfare of the United States and of the world demand peace between these two great nations. A war between them, upon any provocation short of the most flagrant, would be a crime against civilization which the Christian nations ought never to forgive. Both countries are now peaceful, prosperous and advancing in freedom and in power. The millions of their people enjoy all the blessings of good government,—all the rights of civil and religious liberty, and all the hopes which the progress of Education and of Christian culture inspire for the future. Each has internal evils to be removed, domestic resources to be developed, and a national character to be enlightened and elevated. These labors demand peace and harmony. Why should not both nations enjoy them undisturbed?

It should not be forgotten, moreover, in any view looking to the future, that England and the United States are now the only countries in the world where the People are free,—where Constitutions regulate the conduct of Government, and where the principles of civil and religious freedom find any place in the conduct of affairs. Despotism more or less complete has conquered every other nation, and the millions of Europe have practically no voice in their own government, no freedom of action or of conscience, no rights of person or of property of which they may not be stripped at the will of their rulers. It would be treason to Liberty for the only two nations that still are free, to engage in a war which would weaken and injure both, and advance no real interest of either.

We cannot believe that madness rules the councils of our Government, or that the Senate is prepared to face the dire calamities which the absolute rejection of this treaty would involve. It may be defective:—in its details it may need amendment; but in its main features it is essentially just and advantageous for both England and the United States.

The Richmond Enquirer contains the following comment upon the subject:

"If the Government were at liberty to follow its own interests, and to consult the popular feeling in this Central American complication, it would undoubtedly insist upon the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. Admonished, however, that such a policy would inevitably provoke a conflict with Great Britain, we have to satisfy ourselves that its contingent advantages would indemnify us for so deplorable a consequence. Is the country ready to declare war against England for the impracticable application of the principle of the Monroe doctrine to the present case? Are the people willing to assert the theoretical ascendancy of this country over the American continent at the hazard of hostilities with the foremost power of the earth? Shall an incomprehensible dispute over an infinitesimal issue be pushed to an extremity which will expose all the great interests of the nation to the wide-wasting calamities of battle by land and sea? If a negative response be returned to these inquiries, then is the Administration justified in the attempt to remedy the defects of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, rather than venture upon the bold, but perilous experiment of a repeal of the Convention."

We believe the sound judgment and good sense of the whole country will heartily indorse these views. And we trust the sentiments they embody will have weight with the Senate in its final action upon the subject.

NEW-YORK RASCALITY.—The New-Bedford Mercury says: "It is evident that rascality is drawing to a crisis in New-York; the murder of Dr. BURDELL is evidence of this." We are very glad that our country cotemporary can take this view of the subject; but we do not quite see the affair in the same light. In one sense rascality is always arriving at a crisis in this City, as the records of our Criminal Courts prove. The Mercury has also got an idea that "it is unsafe to walk the unfrequented streets by day and dangerous everywhere by night," in New-York. There never was a greater mistake. New-York was never safer than it is now, as a residence, and one of the great safeguards of our citizens is that there are no such things here as unfrequented streets; and though an occasional robbery does take place, they are very few and far between, as compared with [illegible]

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.—The writer of the anonymous note to the Coroner, yesterday, stating the rumor he had heard concerning Mr. FARRELL, is entitled to the credit of having opened the way to a full exposure of this most shocking murder. But for him it might have remained forever shrouded in mystery. Mr. FARRELL seems to have been unwilling to volunteer his evidence, yet it is very clear that the consciousness of knowing something that might throw light upon it, troubled him. Fortunately the anonymous letter, giving his name, directed the attention of the Court to him and led to his being at once summoned as a witness. It is very possible that the writer of the letter may desire to remain unknown. If so, there is no reason why endeavors should be made to penetrate his secret.

If there are others in similar circumstances, —who know or have heard of any persons who can give testimony in any way calculated to throw light upon the subject,—it is clearly their duty to follow this example. In no other way can they contribute more to the ends of public justice.

ADVERTISING—THE ITALIAN OPERA AND THE MINOR PRESS OF THE CITY.—Mr. STRAKOSCH, as the world knows, signalized his management of the Opera by a wide departure from custom in the matter of advertising. Usually places of amusement are advertised in every City newspaper, without regard to circulation, influence or anything else. Mr. STRAKOSCH limited his advertising to three or four journals which he supposed had the largest circulation, and gave as a reason for so doing his desire to economize the expenses of the Opera as much as possible. We have already commented on the disposition of the Herald to avail itself of this incident for the purpose of waging a crusade against the City press, and have spoken of it as exceedingly selfish, unjust and illiberal. But we are constrained to confess that the manner in which the affair has been treated by a portion of the journals concerned, is still more obnoxious to censure. They have devoted their utmost energies to abuse of Mr. STRAKOSCH, denunciation of the Opera, sweeping condemnation of the performances, and the most unscrupulous statements concerning the size and character of the audiences; and this openly and avowedly because he does not advertise in their columns. One of these sheets, for example, has the following:

"When we started the ball against BARNUM and STRAKOSCH's management of the Opera, and denounced the miserable tricksters for daring to ignore, with the exception of three Black 'Republican' papers, the entire press of this City, we knew we should crush them out, and leave STRAKOSCH nothing but his folly to reflect upon. His artists, we learn, are only half paid. The sad position in which they placed Madame de WYNANDS, has caused her severe illness; in fact, the whole concern is a dead failure—the public are the sufferers."

Another has the following:

"CONVERSATION AND RAGES.—Mr. STRAKOSCH confesses that he has acted unwisely in restricting his Opera advertisements to the three leading Black "Republican" journals; and has ordered his advertisements to appear in the Mirrors from this date. This evening 'Norma' will be given, with FAMBRI as the Duke. We hope to see a full house."

The Express has held the same tone and the Sunday papers have been perfectly ferocious in their abuse of the Opera, and have not hesitated to acknowledge that the withdrawal of its advertising patronage is the ground and motive of their censure. Nothing could possibly do more towards satisfying the public of the propriety of the course pursued by Mr. STRAKOSCH, than this conduct on the part of the papers aggrieved. It shows conclusively, that their praise or censure is a matter of traffic,—that advertising secures their applause and its refusal their abuse. It is in fact a palpable confession of the most flagrant venality in their management, and must destroy all public confidence in their musical and dramatic criticism. Journals acting thus openly and shamelessly in violation of the first principles of equity and common fairness, have no right to be regarded as "the City Press." They reflect no credit on the profession, but damage and degrade it in the estimation of the public.

RUFUS CHOATE AND THE NEW ADMINISTRATION.—We observe sundry speculations in the public journals concerning the appointment of Mr. CHOATE to some responsible position in the new Administration. Whatever may be Mr. BUCHANAN'S purpose or wish in the premises, we greatly mistake Mr. CHOATE'S character if he could be induced, under any circumstances, to accept any office whatever, at his hands. Such a course on his part would give color to the imputations that were freely made upon his motives for advocating Mr. BUCHANAN'S election, and would essentially damage his character and position as a public man.

We have never doubted that in sustaining Mr. BUCHANAN and opposing the Republican organization, Mr. CHOATE acted from the sincerest convictions of duty; or that he was entirely earnest in his forebodings of evil from such a sectional movement as the Republican Party seemed to him to indicate. Of his patriotism and devotion to what he deems the highest welfare of the Union, there is no reason to cherish the slightest doubt. We do not believe he would incur the risk of having them brought in question, as they certainly would be, by the acceptance of office under the new Administration.

A LEARNED WORK.—Professor PEIRCE, of Cambridge, who has been delivering a course of lectures before the Smithsonian Institute on "Potential Physics," it is said, has a work on mathematics nearly ready for publication, which is so learnedly written that there is but one man in the world, besides himself, who will be able to read it, and that learned pundit is a Russian. This, of course, will be one of those books without which no gentleman's library will be considered complete.

GENUINE GARROTING.—Since the garrote epidemic broke out, we have heard a good many reports of remarkable cases of that special amusement of the New-York scoundrels; but the most wonderful instance that has yet been made public, occurred last week in Brooklyn. A gentleman by the name of HALL, as the Police chroniclers narrate, was quietly proceeding homeward late in the evening, when he was attacked by a garroter who put his arm around Mr. HALL'S neck, and while holding him in that position, robbed him of his pocket-book, watch, and even took the gold studs and sleeve buttons out of his shirt. The garroter then made off, and the plundered gentleman, according to his own account, immediately took a revolver from his pocket, and fired at the robber; but, unfortunately, missed him. THE INDIANA SENATORIAL CASE.

Mr. EVER moved the reference of the credentials of Mr. FITCH, the proceedings of the Senate and the protest of the members of the House of Representatives of Indiana relative thereto, to the Committee on Judiciary.

Mr. TOOMBS desired that these papers might be referred to a Select Committee. The Committee on the Judiciary had dedicated his jurisdiction for that century, and, in addition to that, the Committee had had two or three cases of that character before them this session. The Committee on the Judiciary had a good deal of business before them now, and for one he should not be willing to consider this question in preference to the other business already before them.

Mr. TOOMBS thought that the subject ought to be referred to a select Committee, composed in part of gentlemen of the opposite party.

The Green Railroads.

The statement of some of our contemporaries that the great railroads centering in New-York were [illegible] by the freshet, should be taken with a grain of salt. No damage at all has been received on the Harlem, New-Haven or New-Jersey Roads—all [illegible] good time and are punctual.

The Erie Road is in perfect order this side of Newburgh, 105 miles from New-York. All the local trains on that road as far as Port Jervis are in order.

The railroad bridge which crossed the Delaware [illegible] miles to the eastward of Narrowsburg has been [illegible] by the force ice which the rising waters brought against it, so that no train has since arrived from the westward of that point. The bridge was one of two spans and very slightly built, but two spans were temporarily demolished. The Division Superintendent telegraphs that the water is still too high to [illegible], but no fears for a change in pro[illegible]. Nothing will be commenced; but [illegible] bridge will be rebuilt [illegible] the [illegible] will be slight. Beyond [illegible] no intelligence has yet been received, on [illegible] of the telegraph wires which [illegible] bridge was carried away.

[illegible] drifted from the river, and blocks up [illegible] in a great many places, and about 7½ [illegible] Narrowsburg the track is demolished [illegible] for any feet.

[illegible] have been no express trains sent out since the disaster occurred, but it is thought that the road will be put in complete running order by Wednesday, at the latest.

Trains upon the Hudson River Railroad, from this City, all started at their regular time, but none went further than Poughkeepsie, though the track is [illegible] up as Rhoff. The two bridges above [illegible] are washed away, so that it will be some [illegible] before communication, by rail, with Albany, [illegible].

All mail mail matter beyond Poughkeepsie, on the Hudson River Railroad, will be sent to-day, by way of the Harlem Railroad, at 1000 A. M.

All mail matter for places beyond Port Jervis, on the Erie Railroad, will be sent by the same route.

The entire train on the Hudson River Railroad started at 9 A. M.

The Long Island Railroad trains worry through, at least, to Greenhead. If the weather moderates they will get through to Greenport by the 4th of July.

The Mails.

We received the following statement in reference to the mails, from the Post-Office, at a late hour last night:

We have received no mail south of Philadelphia to-day, and no northern mail thus far whatever.

The Erie Railroad mail from Port Jervis and east of that point came in to-night; also, an Erie Railroad way mail, due last night, came in to-night, and New-Jersey Central Railroad.

The mails from the East are nearly on time. The latest dates are Chicago, Feb. 6; New-Orleans, Feb. 7; Mobile, Feb. 8; Charleston, Feb. 7; Savannah, Feb. 9; Cincinnati, Feb. 7; St. Louis, Feb. 6; Albany, Feb. 7.

The Freshet at Albany.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

The water receded considerably during the night, but it is still high. The train over the Harlem Road, from New-York yesterday morning, reached here without difficulty, at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Some of the passengers reached this City [illegible], having gone round by the way of Troy. [illegible] has been received over the Hudson River Road. A large quantity of grain which was stored in the ground stories, in the belief that it would be safely out there, has been flooded. The State-street [illegible] around most there the iron columns which support it. The east end of the bridge is [illegible] from the supports.

The Visiting Committees continued their labors until late last night. They found much suffering and afforded material relief. The congregation of St. [illegible] Church has raised a relief fund of $400, and opened soup houses near the flooded districts. It is a singular fact that the greatest suffering of the flooded districts last night arose from the want of water, that the rushing waters the pipes through which it flowed being destroyed or submerged. It is reported that Mr. Moses, keeper of the large garden on the Island, opposite the City, and another family residing on the Island, have perished. They have not, at least, yet been rescued. St. John's Church, on the corner of Ferry and Dallius streets, was materially damaged, the floor and pews being torn up.

The warehouse, book-keeper of Messrs. Gibson & Hanford, had a narrow escape. He was in the building when it took fire, but was found and rescued by the firemen when nearly exhausted. His escape had been entirely cut off, the firemen having to reach the building on boats and rafts.

At a meeting of the Relief Committee, at noon, [illegible] was subscribed on the spot. The [illegible] have gone out for more, and a large [illegible] Committee has been appointed. The report of the Visiting Committee was, that immediate relief was required. Nearly all the coal-yards in the southern part of the city are submerged, so that those [illegible] cannot get at them to do so, and were in want of fuel. It is now snowing.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Feb. 10—P. M.

The weather is cold and stormy. LOLA MONTEZ and her sister, who have been playing an engagement here, engaged a boatman to take them across the river in a skiff. They were landed safely, after a hard and perilous row. They were the first that have crossed the river since the storm. On the second trip across the three men in the boat got exhausted, and were carried away down the stream below the city. The fire bells were rung, in order to call out assistance, but fortunately when the men had been carried some distance down the river, they were enabled to guide the boat to a spot where it struck the ice without injury, and the men were rescued from the floating ice. They have not attempted to return, but will come by way of Troy.

Business is partially resumed on the south of Albany. Much suffering is anticipated from the cold.

The passengers who left New-York by the Hudson River Road on Monday morning, reached here at 8 o'clock this evening. Some of them crossed the river in a skiff at great hazard, among whom were Senators Rathbun, Ferry and Kelly. The track for miles from Albany is covered, and in some places torn up. The passengers got to Livingston Creek, five miles north of Hudson, and from thence most of them walked to Oak Hill where they got sleighs for Greenbush. A portion of them went round by the way of Troy.

Along the Hudson.

A small bridge over the Livingston Creek has been swept off, as well as two hundred feet of the bridge at Stockport. The passengers on the Hudson River Railroad, when they arrived at Livingston Creek, made a circuit of two miles on the ice, and arrived safely on the other side of the Creek, where a train of cars from Hudson was in waiting to convey the passengers to Hudson, and from that city to Albany on the Berkshire Road. The baggage and mail were taken round in sleighs, room and seats being provided for the ladies by the officers of the Company. The train that backed to Tivoli, with some twelve or fifteen passengers, and switched off for the night near Chambers-street. The large bridge over the Greenport Creek has also gone. It is reported that the dams on the Kinderhook Creek have been broken, and every bridge along the Creek carried off.

The Freshet at Saugerties.

The heavy rains and thawing of the large quantities of ice and snow on the mountains, caused a freshet in the Esopus Creek. The dam which [illegible] the tanneries and factories, gave way, filling the factories and destroying a large amount of property. Another carried away between two and three hundred tons of coal from the iron works, and damaging the paper-mill to the amount of $600.

The numerous wooden [illegible] in the Creek were driven from their fastenings. Also, the ferry-boat was [illegible] by the River. Several of the vessels [illegible] stranded.

The contract will be let for shackets at Saugerties, as several hundred shackets are thrown out of employment.

The Freshet at Saugerties.

OSWEGO, Tuesday, Jan. 13.

The six vessels which were loosed from their moorings on Sunday morning by the freshet, and driven into the lake, were found near Fort Ontario, and five of them brought into port this morning.

The Ella Adelaide and Wide Awake were nearly full of water, and in coming into the harbor touched the bottom, when the former sank in deep water. The Wide Awake was thrown on her beam ends by a heavy sea, and has gone ashore near the Fort. Both will be a total loss. The Pegasus, at the last account, was in the ice below Ontario. The wind is now blowing a heavy gale.

Breaking up of the Ice in the Western Rivers—Serious Damages, &c.

CHICAGO, Monday, Feb. 9.

Owing to the damage to the telegraph lines and the destruction of the railroad bridges by the severe freshet of Friday and Saturday, we are unable to give a full report of the loss of life and property. At Aurora, on Friday night, two bridges, a saw-mill, planing-mill, carriage factory and a large quantity of lumber were swept away. It is feared that several lives have been lost.

The following additional damages to Railroads have occurred: The Rock Island Railroad Bridge at Morris is gone; the Michigan Central Railroad Bridge at Ypsilanti is destroyed, and the bridge at Niles is also reported destroyed. Several bridges on the St. Joseph and Kalamazoo Rivers have been carried off. Both branches of the Chicago River rose several feet on Saturday. The southwest portion of the city is entirely submerged. Great apprehension is felt for the safety of the lumber yards and bridges. A sudden change in the weather on Sunday night consolidated the floating ice. The river is now falling, and vessels are considered out of danger. The total damage to the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad is estimated at $100,000.

PITTSBURG, Monday, Feb. 9.

The St. Louis River has risen eighteen feet since Saturday morning, and is still rising. Immense quantities of ice are floating in the Missouri, which is open to above Jefferson City, pouring out a high flood. The Illinois is open all the way up, and has risen twelve or fifteen feet at Peoria, and is still rising. The upper Mississippi is rising, but we do not know how far it is open. Heavy rains have been general throughout the West, and numerous land-slides have occurred.

Condition of the Western Railroads.

MILWAUKEE, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

The damages to the roads in this section have been slight, and are repaired. Trains are running regularly.

FOND DU LAC, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

No trains are leaving. We have nothing authentic concerning the state of the roads.

GALENA, Tuesday, Feb. 16.

The Main Line train was sent out this morning. Forces have been stationed at the brakes to transfer baggage and passengers. No freights received.

CHICAGO, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

No trains are running on the Fulton, Burlington and Rock Island Roads, but it is expected that they will be in running condition to-morrow. The Alton and St. Louis trains are running regularly. The Illinois Central and Chicago Branch Roads are uninjured, and the damage to the Main Line road has been slight. The Michigan Southern Road has sustained no damage, and over the Michigan Central road trains are running regularly, with a change at the Ypsilanti Bridge.

The thermometer stood here this morning at zero.

The Freshets in New-Jersey—Mail Delays, &c.

From the Newark Daily Advertiser of yesterday.

The recent warm rain, which created destructive freshets in other States, also overflowed some of our New-Jersey streams, but fortunately for our people, the Passaic River as yet is but little affected. In the Delaware, the tide rose to an unusual height, and much ice was carried with it. The trains on the Railroad, which left Philadelphia and New-York yesterday morning, were detained in consequence. The train which left Philadelphia at 5 o'clock was unable to get any further than White Hill, (this side of the Delaware,) one and a half miles from Bordentown. The track at that point was covered with ice and water—the ice having been jammed all along the shore and over the track. There were about two feet of ice and water on the road. The 7 o'clock mail train from Philadelphia was stopped by similar obstructions at Burlington, and the mails for New-York were taken back to the Philadelphia Post-Office from that point, and accordingly did not reach this city till about 10 P. M., when both mails came together.

In the neighborhood of White Hill, 40 or 50 cords of wood belonging to the Railroad Company were swept away. There were quite a number of canal boats, which had been either damaged or stove in and sunk by the ice. The 6 o'clock mail train reached Philadelphia about 4 o'clock.

At Trenton the tide rose very high and flooded the lower part of the city, obliging hundreds of families to move. All the mills on the river were more or less damaged. After great fears the Delaware Bridge is safe. Considerable property has been destroyed. A portion of Van Cleve's foundry fell. The ice is piled up in the streets adjacent to the river, and the water rose six feet higher than ever known before.

At Lambertville a house was carried away.

In the Raritan river the tide rose rapidly and flooded parts of New-Brunswick, so that many who had property in cellars and basements were unable to save anything. About fifty schooners, sloops, barges and canal boats were torn from their moorings and forced away. Many of them, it is believed, will be recovered again, as a large number of them are on the meadows a few miles below the city—some of them half a mile from the river. A portion of the vessels are so far off it is feared they will not be worth what it would cost to get them afloat again, and must consequently prove almost a total loss. About a dozen vessels are lying fast upon wharves, and will be got off with much difficulty and loss. A portion of Albany-street bridge was carried away. The total loss is estimated at from $20,000 to $50,000. Messrs. ROLYN & HAZLAN lost $5,000 worth of lumber. The water was higher than ever before known. The river and canal, which flow side by side with the tow-path intervening, were one complete stream of water.

The Freshet in the Susquehanna River.

From the Harrisburgh Telegraph of Monday.

The ice on the river commenced breaking up and moving off last night, with a tremendous crash, startling many of our citizens from their quiet slumbers. As the ice began to move the water began to raise, and this morning it was at least sixteen feet above low water mark, and still rising with fearful rapidity, causing many to apprehend a flood similar to that which desolated this vicinity in 1846. Three of the piers of the new railroad bridge have been so injured by the moving ice as to endanger the safety of this beautiful structure. The third pier in particular as viewed from the Harrisburg bridge is in a very precarious state, nearly one-half of its western side having been torn away by the ice. The Columbia has interrupted the usual railroad travel across the bridge.

This morning the river a few miles below the borough became partially choked up with the huge masses of floating ice, which had the effect to stop its progress opposite the borough, excepting in a narrow channel midway from our shore and the island, where the ice still continues to move slowly, but fortunately it is out of the line of the damaged railroad bridge piers.

The "break up" in the river has thrown the ice in some places over the railroad track, and prevented the trains from running. The down train this morning was stopped about four miles below town, the ice having gorged at that point, and being thrown up over the track in places from 10 to 15 feet high. For miles along the shore it is piled up in masses of 20 feet and more. The scene is awful, and there is great danger of a heavy destruction of property.

The train from the West due this morning, has been also detained from the same cause. It is reported that one or more of the bridges over the Juniata have been swept away. Several of the piers of the Cumberland Valley Railroad Bridge are much injured, and it is feared the bridge, or part of it, will be swept away. In consequence of the dangerous condition of the structure, the running of the trains over it has been stopped.

The Freshet in the Ohio and Tributaries.

From the Pittsburg Journal of Monday.

Last evening, at twilight, there were about sixteen feet six inches of water in the channel and stationary. We regret to learn that a number of boats and flats were lost.

The ice in the Monongahela gave way on Saturday night, doing serious damage to boats, flats, &c. At McKeesport, Mr. DRAVO & SON lost three loaded coal boats, JOHNSON NEAL lost three at the same place. One pair was lost at the mouth of the Youghiogeny; the owners' names we did not learn. At Green Spring we learn that a number of boats were sunk. At Port Ferry the damage was not so extensive. One coal boat, owned by Messrs. WELLS & Co., is known to have been swept away. One pair of boats passed over Dam No. 1 about 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, and were dashed to pieces; also a large amount of lumber, and what appeared to have been portions of houses destroyed; we shall no doubt receive further accounts during the day.

The second break of the ice in the Allegany began on Saturday, at 10 P. M. The ice was very heavy, and, from appearance, did great damage on the way down. It was reported that the Monongahela stream rose so rapidly as to carry off all boats, flats, rafts, &c., that were made fast in that stream. A friend, whose business required his presence on the Allegany Wharf during Saturday night, informed us that, at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, that stream was full of lumber, [illegible]
